

Remembering our brothers who have passed from this life

SPANJAARD, BARRY '48

18 March 1998, of cancer, in Santa Clarita, CA. Survivor of the Holocaust (see story on page 43).

Attended business school after AMA; buyer for Bloomingdale's in New York City; sales executive with Max Factor in California.

After his retirement, at the behest of his wife, Bunny, published Don't Fence Me In, an account of his time in Nazi death camps. Lectured on his book in later life.

Survived by his wife, Bunny, of Santa Clarita, CA; a son, Fred Spanjaard, of Malibu, CA; and a cousin, Jacques, of New York City.

Attended Augusta for three years, during which time he wrote most of his book, Don't Fence Me In. He had just arrived in the United States from a German concentration camp and was almost immediately sent to a military school. The book title was taken from a then-popular song. Barry felt compelled to record his story, and much of the manuscript was written in his room in Big Barracks on a typewriter borrowed from Bob Bradford '50.

(1999 June Bayonet)
